Rome, Italy

Alois, King of the Visigoths arrived before Rome in the autumn of 408.

Twice the city succeeded in getting Alois to retire with his army, but as the Romans failed to yield to his dictation he laid siege to Rome for 3rd time. On Apr 24, 410, the city was abandoned to the fury of the Goths. Part of the city was burned, many were killed, and

Rome was sacked by Alaric

A marauding band of Vikings reached the gates of Rome itself, crashing through its walls to sack a city that for centuries had been one of the greatest powers in earth's history.

One of the Roman institutions that grew stronger in this chaos was the Catholic Church.

The heathens dropped their Pagan God out and raised a church that demanded - and got - an algebraic number change than the Roman empire had ever

Visigoths sack Rome

Alaric carried the offensive to the heart of Italy. When Emperor Theodosius died in 395, the Visigoths, who had settled south of the Danube and entered the imperial service, rebelled and chose Alaric, one of their own commanders, as their leader. Under him, they ravaged the whole of Thracæ, Macedonia and Greece before being defeated by the Vandal Roman General STILIKHO in in 397. Constantine, for the moment, was made accus. Alaric attempted to invade Italy in 401, withdrawing after indecisive warfare only to return in 408. A successful siege of Rome in 409 enabled him to impose a puppet emperor on the Senate. Negotiations with Constantine III who was holding out at RAVENNA were fruitless, and in 410 Alaric sacked Rome, before setting out in an assault on Sicily and Africa. That Alaric died on the return journey

Last Roman Troops left Britain.

The faltering Roman empire abandoned the northwestern outpost. In 367 Roman Britain was faced with a 3-pronged Barbarian attack: while Picts from the north broke through Hadrian's Wall, Saxons from the east and Irish from the west launched raids on the island's coasts. Emperor Valentinian sent his general Theodosius to restore order, and the Posthumus to be no incentive for him.

But the emperor's difficulties mounted
But he became less important to Rome. About 400 Roman troops were withdrawn slowly against the Vandal.

In 409 the emperor ordered all the Roman officers. In 410 the last Roman troops left.
In 408 several centurions were appointed Roman emperor by the Roman troops, several to defend Rome & did not return.

But he remained so until the arrival of the Goths in 440.

Aug. 24, 410

Goths under Alaric attacked Rome for 3rd time; forced their way in. Entry explored by breach. A certain lady of high rank was even suspected of opening the gates for humanitarian reasons. During 3 days of plundering, the Goths seized vast riches; among them probably the treasures from the Jewish Temple. ATITAVLF captured Valia Placidia, the emperor's sister. She eventually became his wife.

Augurino created in his "City of God" an

From 410 until his death in 423 Honorius did what he could to salvage the situation, but imperial control over the western provinces was irreparably weakened. A series of pretenders rose and fell - CONSTANTINE III in Gaul and Britain, MAXIMUS in Spain, ATTALUS in Italy and through the work of his general CONSTANTIUS, HONORIUS did succeed in reasserting a measure of control over the BARBARIANS and

Visigoths who were now settled within the empire, though Spain was still troubled
